“My transferrable skills from business continuity set me up for my next job. I enjoy the large variety in my work today. Business continuity experience trains your thinking to be holistic, aiding the path to rewarding work.”

Nancy Holloway-White, CBCP, CBCA

FINANCIAL SERVICES

Banking is a great space to work in because of the interconnected complexities. I'm very customer focused, so with everything I do in business continuity planning I ask: How does this affect our customers, the interconnected ecosystem, the whole circle to ensure customers can continue to use their services? In many industries it can be challenging to get recognition and funding for business continuity; in banking it is a requirement. Customers expect and demand it.

ADVANCEMENT

Having a CBCP was a requirement for moving into a new role in a global institution. The hiring manager was accomplished in business continuity and was looking for the CBCP certification. Having the certification was important; it enabled me to work in that global environment.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS

I've experienced business disruptions with employers and we've come out successfully. The barometer of success for me was that our customers were able to continue. It's also rewarding to do large scale exercises, coordinating hundreds of people and collaborating with a wide range of areas within a company, resulting in success and learning.

Take your career to the next level.

If you've had your ABCP for a while and you've been working in Business Continuity, getting your CBCP is going to be easier than you think. You've gained experience and have the references to back that up. You've achieved a level of advancement you can show to the world with the CBCP credential. If you're ready to get started, we'll do all we can to get you there. Please check the website for supports that help successfully complete your application.
